if we could transport ourselves back to the first century ad would we know the year date day and hour of the crucifixion of jesus yes we would we may even have been an eyewitness but can we know these time markers today yes we can in the day jesus died using biblical historical archaeological and literary information of that century readers will trace the time of jesus death to the very hour of the very day of the very year that the savior was crucified this is not some hocus pocus pseudo science this is the real deal based on eyewitness historical and literary accounts and relying on the methods of telling time in the first century readers can pinpoint the hour jesus said it is finished it s almost like being there an astute account of tokyo s commuter train network and an intellectually stimulating invitation to rethink the interaction between humans and machines japan forum with its infamously packed cars and disciplined commuters tokyo s commuter train network is one of the most complex technical infrastructures on earth in an anthropology of the machine michael fisch provides a nuanced perspective on how tokyo s commuter train network embodies the lived realities of technology in our modern world drawing on his fine grained knowledge of transportation work and everyday life in tokyo fisch shows how fitting into a system that operates on the extreme edge of sustainability can take a physical and emotional toll on a community while also creating a collective way of life one with unique limitations and possibilities an anthropology of the machine is a creative ethnographic study of the culture history and experience of commuting in tokyo at the same time it is a theoretically ambitious attempt to think through our very relationship with technology and our possible ecological futures fisch provides an unblinking glimpse into what it might be like to inhabit a future in which more and more of our infrastructure and the planet itself will have to operate beyond capacity to accommodate our ever growing population not a rage against the machine but an urge to find new ways of coexisting with technology contemporary japan an extraordinary study ethnos a fascinating in depth account of the innovations inventions sacrifices and creativity required to ensure tokyo s millions of commuters keep rolling it also provides much food for thought as our transportation systems become increasingly reliant on automated technology pacific affairs
